STO union job actions could escalate

Dylan C. Robertson
For Metro | Ottawa

Gatineau bus drivers are hinting at more intense labour disruptions, claiming that negotiations with the Société de transport de l'Ottawa (STO) are hitting an impasse.

Since Jan. 20, STO workers have been working-to-rule, refusing overtime hours and reporting buses for repairs, both of which combine to create a maintenance backlog that has led to STO cancelling scores of routes for commuters.

The union's contract expired in December 2014, and negotiations have focused on overtime and retirement pay. On Thursday, a dozen drivers picketed the STO's main office in Hull, drawing honks from drivers passing by.

The union has announced a day-long meeting March 1, where members will vote on whether to accept the federal government's offer to enter arbitration. The next day, both sides will say whether they'd accept arbitration, which is a judicial decision where the government will hear both sides and issue a binding decision.

Typically, if one or both sides reject arbitration, unions toughen their strike measures, like walking off the job entirely.

Meanwhile, the STO had planned a monthly public consultation for Thursday night, though the strike was not on the agenda.

IMPROVEMENT

Community leaders talk trends, future of the area

Dylan C. Robertson
For Metro | Ottawa

If you think Elgin Street just ain't what it used to be, you're not imagining things. More than a dozen businesses on the commercial thoroughfare have either closed or rebranded themselves in the past two years, according to a Metro analysis.

With Elgin preparing for a drastic overhaul, Metro talked to proprietors and community leaders associated with the area about what accounts for the changes, whether they're occurring at an unhealthy rate, and what the future holds for the street.

Three themes recurred in many conversations: rising rent, the upcoming renovation, the need to establish a business improvement area.

Rising rents

Some of the Elgin Street businesses Metro spoke to cited commercial rents, which in Ottawa generally require a five-year commitment, by way of explaining why they pulled the plug before times got tough.

Oz Kafe closed its doors last June after 12 years on Elgin. As the business's profile rose, so did its rent. Gold Medal Plates awards in 2012 and 2013 brought tourists from across Canada to Balpinar's establishment, just as her landlord's fees started tripling.

"The landlords are getting greedy, and the only people who can actually afford it are the people who have a corporation behind them," said Balpinar,

Looming construction

Pending a spring vote, the city is set to widen Elgin's crumbling sidewalks and halve its parking spots, making way for benches, cyclists and buses. Construction could start in 2019.

Local councillor Catherine McKenney is pushing for fencing to keep Elgin pleasant. She notes the online consultation netted 1,090 responses. "People across the city care about Elgin St," she says. "Everyone loves Elgin."

Gloria McCann, co-owner of Al's Steakhouse, admits contradictory feelings. While Elgin desperately needs a new look, she said, she can't bear to see her road torn up.

"What's gonna happen to the mom-and-pop shops?" she said.

"We have to do it," Balpinar said of the refresh. She recalled cancelling a Saturday dinner service after a decades-old water main burst. Yet she fears a "terrifying" long-term closure will "kill a lot of the independent businesses."

No BIA

Multiple entrepreneurs pointed out Elgin has no Business Improvement Area. Enacted through provincial law, BIAs charge membership fees to act as spokespeople, political advocates and promotional agents for businesses. Some run events, others advertise and lobby City Hall for street improvements.

BIAs "almost always created out of conflict," said Zachary Dayler, head of the Wellington West BIA, which itself formed in opposition to controversial road construction. He said an Elgin Street BIA could use advertising and other means to make up for the loss of tourist traffic that will inevitably accompany the construction.

"Ottawa's good for museums and Parliament, but not at marketing its neighbourhoods to tourists," he said.

DEVELOPMENT

Little Italy highrise proposed

A developer has asked the city for permission to build a 25-storey condo tower in Little Italy, which would be visible from Highway 417 and Prince of Wales Drive.

Sakto Corporation wants to build 175 rental apartments onto its existing complex of offices, restaurants and housing at Preston and Aberdeen Streets. The company wants an exemption to the area's 15-storey limit.

The application, set to go before the city's planning committee Tuesday, also seeks to add a ninth floor to its existing Adelaide building.

FOOD

Brace yourself for cold dining

If sitting outside in the winter-time is your idea of fun — and you don't mind your food chilled — the city may be about to do you a big favour.

The Right of Way Patio bylaw would extend the traditional patio season beyond the spring and summer months. November through March is the time-slotted for the new period, as requested by the city's Right of Way, Heritage and Urban Design Services.

"We're hoping to animate the public space in the winter and encourage that sort of positive use of the public space," said Linda Carkner, program manager of Right of Way Information and Approvals.

Cafés and restaurants have expressed their interest in outdoor serving in the winter time, especially for events like Winterlude, St. Patrick's Day and next year's Grey Cup, Carkner said.

Swiss Pastries owner responds to lockout

SMALL BUSINESS

Manufacturing halts at baking facility after late payment

Adam Kveton
For Metro | Ottawa

Five days late on a lease payment. That, claims Swiss Pastries owner Siegfried Heilemann, is the reason he was given for being barred from his business's manufacturing facility and company records.

Heilemann said in an interview that he admits to being late with a payment to former Swiss Pastries owner Connie Zuberbuehler, who still owns the company's manufacturing facility at 1423 Startop Rd.

He claims he communicated to Zuberbuehler he'd be late on his payment and thought there would be no problem.

But Heilemann said he discovered late on Feb. 10 that the locks at the Startop facility had been changed. He said he went down to the facility and found security guards blocking his way.

"It wasn't a good feeling," said Heilemann.

Though he feels he's been tricked, Heilemann said, he does not have the money to go to court. Instead, he chose to post his side of the story in an open letter on the Swiss Pastries website.

"I am not the one who ran this company into bankruptcy or closure," he said.

In an interview on Wednesday, Zuberbuehler confirmed she locked Heilemann out of the Startop facility, but said she had a legal right to do so, and denied that the late rent payment was the sole reason.

MUSIC

An orchestra's spin on gaming, anime

A local orchestra is showing there's a place for Pikachu and Totoro among their strings, horns and brass.

The University of Ottawa Pop Orchestra is holding their first video game and anime concert on Saturday. It's an impromptu event spawned from the growing group's first ever paid gig, a performance at the G-Anime expo in Gatineau on Jan. 21.

After a swell of positive feedback, the orchestra decided to bring their performance to the masses, said Mathieu Roy, executive director of the group.

Roy founded the orchestra in 2012 as an option for musicians who weren't necessarily pursuing a career in music.

"A lot of people are actually classically trained, so for them it's something completely different," said Roy.

They've performed music from West Side Story, Harry Potter and Star Trek, in addition to classical staples.

"Now people are actually really just as excited to play a movement from Beethoven as they are to play something from Star Wars," he said. It also encourages new audience to check out orchestras, said Roy.

"There is this big stigma going around: 'Oh, classical music, it's hard, it's not really accessible if you're not in the know,' and things like that. But if you think about it... you are surrounded by classical music all the time," he said. It's used in commercials and cartoons like Bugs Bunny.

Now instead of Elmer Fudd introducing you to Richard Wagner, this orchestra can be your gateway to Howl's Moving Castle.

PHOENIX PAY SYSTEM

Unions seek workers' contingency fund

Three federal public service unions are calling on the Liberal government to include a $75-million contingency fund in the coming budget to help address the Phoenix pay system fiasco.

The Public Service Alliance of Canada, the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada and the Canadian Association of Professional Employees say the fund would help ensure workers are paid correctly and on time.

Chris Aylward, PSAC's national executive vice-president, says the pool would help expand the capacity of departments to address Phoenix pay-system challenges.

Earlier this week in the House of Commons, Public Services Minister Judy Foote said it is "totally unacceptable" employees are going without pay for their work.

She says an injustice was done to employees by the Conservative government, adding the Liberals are now trying to ensure workers have a better payroll system than ever. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Study shows plight of detained Canadian kids

REFUGEES

One boy spent 803 days in an immigration holding centre

Canada has placed more than 200 Canadian children in immigration detention with their non-status parents since 2011, alongside hundreds of formally detained non-Canadian children, says University of Toronto study.

Based on data obtained from the Canada Border Services Agency, the U of T International Human Rights Program found at least 241 Canadian-born children — an average of 48 a year — were held in the immigration holding centre in Toronto between 2011 and 2015. The data do not cover detention facilities in other parts of Canada. On average, they spent 36 days at the detention centre with their incarcerated parents, with one boy spending 803 days — over two years — in the detention facility.

Two-thirds of the detained children were housed there for longer than a week and about 31 per cent were held for longer than a month. Eighty-five per cent of the children were under age 6.

Lena Alexander, a failed refugee from Grenada, was held at the immigration holding centre with her Canadian-born children Crystal and Dameon in 2005. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

"Children who experience even brief periods of detention have extremely negative psychological reactions that often persist long after they are released," warned the 63-page study, Invisible Citizens: Canadian Children in Immigration Detention, released Thursday.

"Children who are spared detention but are separated from their detained parents experience similarly grave consequences for their mental health."

Interviews by researchers with nine detained and formerly detained mothers of Canadian children from the Middle East, West Africa, Central America and the Caribbean found the children had difficulty sleeping, lost their appetite, lost their interest in play, and developed symptoms of depression and separation anxiety, as well as a variety of physical symptoms.

"Many of these symptoms persisted after release from detention," the study warned.

According to the border services policy, Canadian children should only accompany their detained parents if there are no family members or friends to care for them, if they are still being breastfed, are too young to be separated from parents or have health issues.

"Canadian children are invisible in Canada's immigration detention system," said Samer Muscati, the human rights program's director. "While all detention of children is horrible, these children are particularly vulnerable because they lack important legal safeguards, including their own detention review hearings."

Under immigration law, these Canadian-born children are citizens and cannot be formally detained, hence they are unable to access legal proceedings that review their continued "de facto" detention, said Muscati.

BORDER CRISIS

Manitoba steps up to help asylum seekers

Jessica Botelho-Urbanski
For Metro | Winnipeg

After calling on the federal government to adopt a "coordinated approach" in dealing with the influx of asylum seekers, the premier of Manitoba announced his own plans to dispatch emergency resources on Thursday.

Premier Brian Pallister and Minister of Education and Training Ian Wishart announced 14 emergency beds, $70,000 in funding for MANSO (the Manitoba Association of Newcomer Serving Organizations) and $110,000 for Welcome Place in 2017-2018.

The money for MANSO will be put toward hiring a refugee response coordinator, while the funding for Welcome Place will provide more access to support services, like paralegal advice and transportation from Emerson to Winnipeg, for refugee claimants.

"Manitobans have never, ever turned their backs on people," said Pallister.

Extra paramedics will also be placed in the community of Emerson. They will assist volunteer emergency service providers already on the ground, Wishart said. He could not confirm how many would be dispatched.

Author Boyden facing plagiarism allegations

Controversy continues to follow Canadian author Joseph Boyden. Accusations of similarities between one of his texts and a story by an Ojibway storyteller have now surfaced, barely a month after the authenticity of his indigenous identity came under question.

An article by Jorge Barrera published by APTN focuses on similarities found in a small book by healer and storyteller Ron Geyshick called Te Bwe Win and a story titled "Bearwalker" that appeared in Boyden's 2001 short-story collection Born With a Tooth.

Boyden denies he copied the story. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Free speech is alive and well in U.S.

Rosemary Westwood has relocated from Canada to the U.S. She chronicles her observations in a weekly column with Metro.

ROSEMARY WESTWOOD
From the U.S.

Everyone loves a hypocrite, which is to say, hates. Hates with pleasure, really, and never more so than in politics.

Enter the left-wing glee this week when Milo Yiannopoulos lost his book deal, lost his job at the extreme right wing website Breitbart, and was kicked off the program for the Conservative Political Action Conference.

For the avowed free-speech loving right-wing of American politics, Yiannopoulos's resurfaced support of sex between men and 13-year-old boys was a bridge too far, and in rejecting him, they tripped over the "acceptable speech" line so many had, in their own glee, raged against for years.

Down came the implicit support for the extreme right, though not for conference-sponsor Breitbart itself, and out went white supremacist Richard Spencer when he tried to enter the conference on Thursday.

If this all sounds a little college lefty, safe-space-esque, "we don't condone that kind of talk here," that's because it is. And in becoming what they supposedly detest, a great swath of extreme right sympathizers masquerading as first-amendment lovers have been undone.

But the proof that no one need fear for the state of free speech, especially not anti-immigrant, anti-gay, anti-woman, anti-Muslim and anti-Black speech, came in it's most abundant, outrageous and glowing orange from a year and a half ago in Donald Trump himself. If Trump, who possesses an uncanny ability to mix pointed insults with otherwise inscrutable speech, could find himself in the oval office, America's problems do not include threats to right-wing free speech.

Shutting down Yiannopoulos' campus talks or criticizing publishers or firing that nonprofit director who called Michelle Obama an "ape in heels" — these are not attacks on free speech. They are simply evidence of consequence. As in, individual responsibility, or the right's political raison d'être.

It's somewhere on the spectrum of irritating to outright infuriating that I, and thousands of people on Twitter, feel the need to keep pointing out this idea of consequence, as well as the fact that no one is obliged to listen to you.

When I ran all this by a friend the other day, he shook his head in disgust at the very idea of spending a whole column, like this, yet again discussing the first amendment.

"Everyone talks about free speech," he said. "What about good ideas?"

What, indeed.

The cultural focus on what one can say does seemed to have drowned out questions about what's really worth listening to. Richard Spencer was swarmed by media as he was kicked out of CPAC. Yiannopoulos has found fame through bigotry. Donald Trump, well, we all know what happened to him.

And it wasn't a good idea.

Immigrants brace for arrests

DEPORTATIONS

U.S. crackdown prompts many to change up daily routines

In Orange County, California, dozens of immigrant parents have signed legal documents authorizing friends and relatives to pick up their children from school and access their bank accounts to pay their bills in the event they are arrested by immigration agents.

In Philadelphia, immigrants are carrying around wallet-size Know Your Rights guides in Spanish and English that explain what to do if they're rounded up.

And in New York, 23-year-old Zuleima Dominguez and other members of her Mexican family are careful about answering the door and start making worried phone calls when someone doesn't come home on time.

Around the country, President Donald Trump's efforts to crack down on the estimated 11 million immigrants

Jeanette Vizguerra, an undocumented immigrant in the U.S. for 20 years, has taken refuge in a church in Denver, Colorado, with her family for fear of being deported. AFP/GETTY IMAGES living illegally in the U.S. have spread fear and anxiety and led many people to brace for arrest and to change up their daily routines in hopes of not getting caught.

In El Paso, Texas, Carmen Ramos and her friends have developed a network to keep each other updated via text messages on where immigration checkpoints have been set up.

She said she also is making certain everything she does is in order at all times. She checks her taillights before leaving the house to make sure they are working. She won't speed and keeps a close eye on her surroundings.

"We are surprised that even a ticket can get us back to Mexico," said the 41-year-old Ramos, who with her husband and three children left Ciudad Juarez because of drug violence and death threats in 2008 and entered the U.S. on tourist visas that have since expired. "We wouldn't have anywhere to return."

An undocumented Guatemalan migrant mother and her son have called an Austin, Texas, church home for more than a year. Hilda Ramirez says they were fleeing the danger of their country and were caught by immigration authorities as they illegally crossed the border at Texas in 2014. After they were released from a holding facility, a pastor allowed them to live on church grounds.

The unease among immigrants has been building but intensified in recent weeks with ever-clearer signs that the Trump administration would jettison the Obama-era policy of focusing mostly on deporting those who had committed serious crimes.

The administration announced Tuesday that any immigrant in the country illegally who is charged with or convicted of any offence, or even suspected of a crime, will now be an enforcement priority. That could include people arrested for shoplifting or other minor offences, or those who simply crossed the border illegally.

IMMIGRATION

Trump, aides not eye to eye

Seeking to tamp down growing unease in Latin America, U.S. Homeland Security Secretary John Kelly pledged Thursday that America won't enlist its military to enforce immigration laws and that there will be "no mass deportations."

Only hours earlier, President Donald Trump suggested the opposite. He told CEOs at the White House the deportation push was a "military operation."

Kelly said all deportations will honour human rights and follow the U.S. legal system. He said that includes multiple appeals offered to those facing deportation. Kelly said the U.S. approach will involve "close coordination" with Mexico's government. "There will be no use of military forces in immigration," Kelly said. "There will be no mass deportations."

Yet while Kelly tried to alleviate Mexico's concerns, Trump was fanning them further with tough talk about "getting really bad dudes out of this country at a rate nobody has ever seen before." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BACKUP PLANET

Scientists discovered seven Earth-sized planets a mere 40 light-years away from us — at least three of which could theoretically support life as we know it. So should we start packing our bags?

Not so fast
Even with a spacecraft that moves at the speed of light (and such a craft does not exist) it would take almost forty years to get there.

Gas-us
The Hubble Space Telescope is already on the hunt for oxygen, ozone and methane — gases that are byproducts of life — coming from the planets.

Goldilocks zone
This is the nickname for the distance from a star that makes a planet not too hot, not too cold to contain liquid water — considered a key ingredient for life.

Old soul
Young dwarf stars shoot off X-rays and ultraviolet light — potential threats to life. But this star might be past its tantrum phase.

Moving up
Some of the planets in TRAPPIST-1 are a touch bigger than Earth, giving about 10 per cent more room — enough space for that extra bedroom.

Fresh zombies are giving humanity plenty to chew on

In The Girl With All the Gifts, Gemma Arterton plays a teacher who tries to nurture child zombie Sennia Nanua; the pair hit it off during filming (inset). CONTRIBUTED

INTERVIEW

With world in turmoil, latest brush with the undead delivers

Richard Crouse
For Metro Canada

There are as many kinds of cinematic zombies as there are zombie movies. From George A. Romero's lumbering brain eaters and the fast-moving fleshbags of 28 Days Later to the undead hordes of World War Z and The Crazies' sentient creepers, the only thing that binds them is an voracious urge to eat their living counterparts and, these days, an almost unrivalled popularity with horror fans.

It seems when the world is in turmoil people turn to zombies as an outlet for their apocalyptic anxieties. A new British film, The Girl With All the Gifts, borrows from Romero, 28 Days Later and even from The Walking Dead and yet its mix of social commentary, zippy zombies and exploding skulls doesn't feel like a re-tread.

"The zombie metaphor is humanity eating itself," says star Gemma Arterton. "This film extends that because it gives zombies, or hungries as we call them, intelligence, empathy, love and the ability to fend for themselves in a more developed way."

"I think we are in a period of time right now where there is major despair out there about what is happening. This film is poignant now, coming out now post Brexit. It feels quite relevant."

Arterton plays Helen Justineau, teacher of a group of children infected by a zombifying disease but still capable of advanced thought. In the search for a cure these kids are studied at a remote English army base.

Helen has bonded with one remarkable child, Melanie (Sennia Nanua), a youngster as lethal as the others but possessed of superior intelligence and charm. When the base is overrun by "hungries" Helen, Melanie and two others escape but not before the child shows her true colours.

"I did something bad," she says. "I ate bits of the soldiers." With the help of the world-weary Sgt. Eddie Parks (Paddy Consideine) they make their way to London.

"If you talk to Mike Carey who wrote the book and the screenplay," says Arterton, who broke out as an MI6 field agent in 2008's Bond hit Quantum of Solace, "you'll find he's not only a great raconteur but he really knows what's going on with science and politics and he mixes the two together. It is such interesting conversation. He's obviously a big geek but in a really factual way."

A case in point, Arterton says, is the virus that lies at the centre of the film.

"The disease, the fungal infection is actually something that exists. There is a colony of ants in South America that have Ophiocordyceps unilateralis," she explains, diving into the science. "It's a fungal infection that infects them from the inside and then they sprout and turn into a different type of ant. Then those ants will eat the other ants to survive."

"These things happen in nature. Nature is such a strong force. I love that in this film you can see nature taking back the planet."

"We actually used some shots from Chornobyl as the London skyline because Chornobyl is this abandoned city that is completely overgrown now. We might die, but nature will be fine. The world is going to keep going without us."

Helmed by Scottish director Colm McCarthy in his first feature-length production, The Girl With All the Gifts asks difficult questions about the price of survival, capping off the story with chilling words that may — or may not — alleviate lingering zombie phobia.

"It's not all over," says Melanie, "it's just not yours anymore."

Who will be the best of the very best?

A La La Landslide? Maybe not. Here are our selections for who will/should win. PETER HOWELL/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

BEST PICTURE

Will: La La Land or Moonlight
Could: Hidden Figures
Should: Moonlight
Why: The safe money is supposedly on La La Land to win, but I consider this category too close to call. Moonlight's unique coming-of-age story has so much resonance to modern times, I'm thinking — hoping — that the Academy will go for it. And Hidden Figures just might surprise everybody, much like Spotlight did last year.

BEST ACTRESS

Will: Emma Stone (La La Land)
Could: Natalie Portman (Jackie) or Isabelle Huppert (Elle)
Should: Natalie Portman
Why: Front-runner Stone is all set to be the belle of the Oscars with her enchanting performance. But the inner fortitude Portman displayed as the widowed Jacqueline Kennedy impressed me more. Huppert is long overdue for an Oscar and a win is possible and deserved.

BEST DIRECTOR

Will: Barry Jenkins (Moonlight) or Damien Chazelle, (La La Land)
Could: Denis Villeneuve (Arrival)
Should: Barry Jenkins
Why: If voters go La La Land for best picture, then I think they'll choose Jenkins for best director, which would significantly make him the first African-American director to win this honour. And if they choose Moonlight for Best Picture, then Chazelle for Best Director.

BEST ACTOR

Will: Casey Affleck (Manchester by the Sea)
Could: Denzel Washington (Fences)
Should: Casey Affleck
Why: Affleck and Washington each play tortured souls in their respective roles of defeated family men. Affleck's performance was bone deep and truly memorable; Washington's was solid yet showy. But Denzel is a two-time Oscar champ and he won at SAG this year.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTRESS

Will: Viola Davis (Fences)
Could: Michelle Williams (Manchester by the Sea)
Should: Naomie Harris (Moonlight)
Why: This is the easiest Oscar to call and the toughest to endorse. Davis will win for her tremendous performance, although it's arguably category fraud: she really should be up for best actress. Williams defines strong support with her brief Manchester scenes. But Harris exceeds all stereotypes.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR

Will: Mahershala Ali (Moonlight)
Could: Jeff Bridges (Hell or High Water)
Should: Mahershala Ali
Why: Ali has been the obvious choice here ever since he first wowed audiences at TIFF and other fall festivals with his deeply affecting and stereotype-busting portrayal of a fatherly drug dealer. It will be a huge upset if he loses.

Met offers exercise amid art

PERFORMANCE
MetLiveArts
hosting classes
three years in the making

New York City's cavernous Metropolitan Museum of Art has been holding lively morning workout sessions this winter amid its prized masterpieces.

The 45-minute Museum Workout sends people in exercise attire chugging through 35 galleries, past paintings, sculptures, armour and other treasures, before the venerable Fifth Avenue institution opens to the public.

On a recent morning, an overnight snowstorm didn't deter the 15 people who'd signed up for the session.

It started with a warmup: calf stretches in the museum's grand limestone entrance and an easy jog out to the Bee Gees' hit 'Stayin' Alive'. Then came the speedy trek through the galleries and up the preserved ornate staircase of the 19th century Chicago stock exchange.

There were squats in front of John Singer Sargent's Portrait of Madame X, balancing on one leg before Henry VIII's rigid armour, a yoga pose before a bronze nude of the Roman hunting goddess Diana, and jumping jacks in-between, all to a soundtrack of disco and Motown hits.

Why bother travelling to a Manhattan museum — some did, from Pennsylvania, Kentucky and even California — just to exercise?

"This offers you amazing moments," said participant Oliver Ryan, who runs a New York corporate wellness company. "We did our first stretch, and there in the vast gallery was Perseus holding the head of Medusa. What hit me was this was the TV of ancient times, a frozen moment from a story everyone knew."

The Met commissioned the innovative Monica Bill Barnes Dance Company for the project. It was choreographed by the two women leading the workout — Monica Bill Barnes herself and her dance partner, Anna Bass — along with Robert Saenz de Viteri, the company's creative producing director.

Bass said the team worked

"obsessively" calculating how to keep a safe distance from the artworks. That means no wild swinging of arms or legs, and exercising a minimum of three feet or so from any treasure.

Leading scantily clad, pumped up bodies around the artworks "really runs against the culture of being in a museum, being quiet and being still and walking slowly," said Barnes.

"We're in the business of making strange things," she added with a wry smile, "bringing dance where it doesn't belong."

De Viteri helped guide the workout session in a vintage tuxedo and sneakers, holding a laptop attached to a speaker that channeled music and recorded narration by artist and author Maira Kalman, who selected the art and gallery route.

"Something very physical happens to me when I'm in a museum. I get this rush of excitement, this kind of tingle of mad, passionate arousal," Kalman's recorded voice said as the group did side-stretches in front of a stern-looking bust of Benjamin Franklin.

The workout ends with everyone lying on their back, eyes closed, on the floor of the Met's luminous American wing. This yoga pose, called savasana, is meant to release tension from mind and body while absorbing the benefits of the dynamic exercises. Rising over the human stillness is Augustus Saint-Gaudens' ancient goddess — the resplendent, gilded Diana, about to release her arrow.

The first sessions, from Jan. 19 through Feb. 12, were sold out months ago. The interest was so intense that more were added, through March 9, and they're also sold out. Participants, both men and women, have ranged in age from 13 to 85.

Museum officials say there are no immediate plans for a future staging of what is essentially a "performance piece" that took three years to create, with each participant movement matching music and visuals moment by moment.

The Museum Workout was commissioned by the museum's MetLiveArts performance series and partly funded by the Jerome Robbins Foundation and One World Fund.

EXHIBITION

Show paints Vermeer as borrower

His luminous strokes produced masterpieces like Girl with a Pearl Earring.

But Vermeer, the unique jewel in Dutch painting's crown, copied ideas from his contemporaries like every other artist, argues a new major exhibit at the Louvre Museum in Paris that opened Wednesday.

Five years in the making, Vermeer and the Masters of Genre Painting presents a third of the Dutch Golden Age master's complete opus to the public. It is the biggest such collection of the old master's work in Europe in almost two decades.

It shows that, however revolutionary some elements of his paintings were, Vermeer also heavily borrowed from his rivals.

"In a way, Vermeer is not very original because he picks ideas from different contemporaries. His themes are very classical — music-making, lacemaking — that's been done before," curator Blaise Ducos said on Tuesday during a preview of the show.

Ducos said the genius of Vermeer, who died at 43 and produced just 36 paintings, can be seen in how he transformed rehearsed themes and techniques.

"He has a distinct, specific psychology. I think there is a mood in Vermeer that you do not find in other paintings," Ducos said.

Vermeer's 12 oil paintings in the show, including The Milkmaid on loan from Amsterdam's Rijksmuseum, are hung side-by-side with 58 similar works by his 17th-century rivals such as Gerrit Dou and Garard ter Borch.

The exhibit also aims to dispel the widely-held belief that Vermeer was sedentary and seldom left the Dutch town of Delft.

"The show here presents another story ... all the refined paintings here prove that he must have been in touch directly with other paintings and other painters, so both in studios and collectors' mansions," said Ducos. "He must have travelled inside the Netherlands."

The exhibit runs to May 22 at the Louvre and will travel to the National Gallery of Art in Washington D.C. in the fall. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Basketball, soccer provide escape for Syrian children

REFUGEES

Sports help ease pain of displacement

Every Sunday, the gymnasium along Beirut's airport highway echoes with the shouting and laughter of dozens of Syrian children enjoying a rare escape from a grim and confined life in exile.

The Sport 4 Development program, run by the UN children's agency, aims to bring 12,000 children, mostly Syrian refugees, to blacktops and turf pitches this year to teach the basics of soccer and basketball, and to ease the pain of war and displacement.

"We try to get them out of their stressful environments and the frights that they've lived through," said Maher Nakib, 40, the technical director of Hoops Lebanon, the sports association behind the project.

Of the one million Syrian refugees the UN says are living in Lebanon, more than half are under 18 years old. Syrians here face legal and other forms of discrimination, and many parents are hesitant to let their children play outside in the crowded alleys of Beirut's poorer neighbourhoods, where most of the refugees live.

The month-long Hoops program provides a safe environment where the children can blow off steam, as well as learn self-confidence and teamwork.

"They come back home and they're too tired to fight," smiles Fatima Tayjan, a refugee from the Syrian city of Aleppo who has enrolled three of her four children in the program. When her family of six returns home to their crowded two-bedroom apartment, the children have "released all their energy and they are ready to talk to each other," she said.

Children won't necessarily express themselves unless you give them an outlet, and sports are an excellent medium to do so.

M a r a m al-Malwa, a 17-year-old paid volunteer who came up in the program, recalls her own feelings of isolation when she and her family fled from Aleppo to Lebanon five years ago. "It was a new country, even a new accent," she said.

But now she is irrepressible, rising on the balls of her feet when she speaks and helping coaches reach through to children in the group activities. She is one of a handful of the children pulled aside for a six-month mentorship on leadership and coaching.

"You grow, you experience victories, setbacks, you learn to fight for yourself, and you become more confident," she said.

Staffers are trained to identify struggling children, those who lash out and those who retreat into their shells. Psychologists meet with parents weekly to discuss healthy relationships and domestic violence.

The group sessions often bring to light domestic disputes, learning disabilities or experiences of sexual violence. The children are then referred to specialized non-governmental organizations for further support.

On a recent Sunday, the children lined up to dribble through cones, shoot layups and learn cheers and stretches.

"You see a lot of cases of shyness or stubbornness, and you immediately see them change when they're here," al-Malwa said. "I feel like I'm responsible, like I'm in charge of a group."

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

A generous serving of cheddar gives this vegetarian soup a satisfying creaminess.

Ready in 35 minutes

Prep time: 10 minutes
Cook time: 25 minutes
Serves 4

Ingredients

- 4 cups broccoli florets and stem (cut off tough ends) chopped fairly small
- 1 onion chopped
- 2 cups chopped, peeled potato
- 2 cloves garlic minced
- 1 plug olive oil
- 4 cups stock (vegetable or chicken, low sodium)
- 1 1/2 cups milk
- 1 cup grated cheddar
- 1/4 cup grated Parmesan

• salt and pepper to taste

Directions

1. Sauté onion and garlic in a Dutch oven or other large, heavy-bottomed pot for about 5 minutes until soft.

2. Add vegetables and stock and allow to simmer for about 20 minutes until the vegetables are tender.

3. In small batches, ladle the broth and vegetables into your blender and purée. Pour each batch into a bowl as you go. Pour the puree back into your pot.

4. Over medium heat add milk and cheese and stir until the cheese melts. Add salt and pepper to taste.

* IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
This is a marvelous day to schmooze with others. Enjoy the company of friends, and in particular, enjoy the company of groups. People are warmhearted today.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
You look good to others today. In part, people see that you are ready to show your affection for others, and they like this. (Of course they do — everyone wants to be loved and appreciated.)

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Travel for pleasure will appeal to you today. This also is a good day to mingle with people from different backgrounds and other cultures.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
It will be easy to take part in discussions about inheritances and shared property today, because people are in a good mood. In addition, they feel cooperative and generous. (That's all you need.)

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Relations with others are very positive today. Entertain at home. Don't hesitate to let others know how much you care for them.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
This is a good day at work because coworkers are supportive. You also might see ways to make your workspace look and feel more attractive.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
This is a great day for a date or any kind of social outing. Enjoy sports events and playful activities with children. Whatever interactions you have today will be warm and rewarding.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Entertain at home today. Invite the gang over for good food and drink! Discussions with female family members will be positive and warm.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
All your communications with others today will be upbeat and affectionate. This is a strong day for writers and salespeople, as well as those of you who teach or act.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You can boost your income today, because this is a financially favorable day. If shopping, you will want to buy beautiful things for yourself and loved ones.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
This is a positive, feel-good day because the Moon is in your sign, dancing nicely with Venus. Enjoy schmoozing with others.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Work alone or behind the scenes today, because you feel content and happy with the world. You want to take some time just for you, and why not? Find a comfy place and enjoy your favorite drink.
